Dear Chairman Kline and Ranking Member Scott:

As organizations that want to see protections for retirement savers strengthened, we write to express support for the Department of Labor's proposed rule -- now out for public comment -- that would close loopholes and update the standards for retirement investment advice under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).

Americans who save and invest for a secure and independent retirement should be able to trust that the retirement investment advice they receive is in their best interest. Workers and retirees are more dependent than ever on financial professionals to help them navigate the complex decisions they must make to fund a secure and independent retirement. Unfortunately, because of loopholes in rules specifying who is a "fiduciary" under ERISA, many of the financial professionals whom retirement savers rely on for advice are legally allowed to put their own financial interests ahead of the interests of their customers. While many of these professionals nonetheless seek to do what is best for their customers, others take advantage of gaps in the regulations to steer their clients into high-cost, substandard investments that pay the adviser well but eat away at retirement savers' nest eggs over time. This is a particular problem for small savers who are disproportionately served by nonfiduciary advisers and receive conflicted advice.

After years of thoughtful analysis and consultation with all stakeholders, the Department of Labor has drafted a comprehensive proposal that closes loopholes in the definition of investment advice so that anyone who provides individualized investment recommendations to retirement savers -- whether they are saving through a traditional or defined contribution pension plan, such as a 401(k), or an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) -- would be required to provide best interest advice to their clients. Importantly, the proposed rule would eliminate outdated requirements that advice must be 'regular' or serve as the 'primary basis' for an investor's decision, before the best interest standard applies. In a significant improvement over the 2010 proposal, it covers advice about recommendations to roll money out of a pension or 401(k) plan and into an IRA. This is the most important financial decision many people will ever make, with a potential to seriously affect their standard of living in retirement, and is a special area of concern given extremely troubling practices identified in a GAO report.

By updating these standards and closing these loopholes, retirement savers will undoubtedly experience better investment outcomes. At the same time, the proposed rule would provide sufficient flexibility for financial professionals and their firms so they can continue to charge commissions and other sales-based compensation. This reflects a balanced approach that preserves the broker-dealer business model while ensuring that retirement investors of all incomes and portfolio sizes will receive advice that is in their best interest.

We encourage you to stand with your constituents – who are saving for retirement and deserve to have the best financial advice for their future– and support the Department of Labor's rulemaking process as it moves forward.

Sincerely,
